ABOUT ME

I am Himanshu Ranjan Borah, an anthropologist and independent researcher with a Master's degree in Anthropology from Sikkim University, with a specialization in Social and Cultural Anthropology. My academic and research interests encompass Religion, Family and Kinship, Gender Studies, Tribal and Indigenous Studies, Social Stratification and Caste Studies, Indigenous Knowledge Systems and the socio-cultural transformations of Indigenous communities, particularly across Northeast India. My scholarly engagement is grounded in ethnographic fieldwork and interdisciplinary approaches, focusing on social institutions, cultural practices, identity, kinship, community dynamics, indigenous knowledge systems and processes of socio-cultural transformation. I have conducted field-based research and published scholarly work on tribal communities, material culture and ethnographic studies through recognized academic platforms. My research experience includes participant observation, semi-structured interviews, focus group discussions, genealogical methods, ethnographic documentation and quantitative survey techniques. I also have teaching experience as a Guest Teacher, with a commitment to developing critical, inclusive and research-oriented learning environments. My academic vision is centred on advancing Anthropology and Indigenous Studies through rigorous field-based research, interdisciplinary scholarship, effective teaching and meaningful academic collaboration, with particular emphasis on understanding cultural diversity, indigenous knowledge, social institutions and contemporary transformations among the communities of Northeast India.
